Research for transformative action

1. PROFILE

Caribbean Reality Studies Center is a research and training center that focuses on research for transformative action. Since its foundation in 1999 in Aruba, it has carried out many research projects and international activities in cooperation with universities and private organizations. CRSCenter conducts comparative, cross-cultural, cosmopolitan and development-based research on social, cultural, economic, environmental, political and communication issues. The pillars of its research are a context-based, social reality oriented, forward-looking and policy-relevant approach to development that is understood as mobilizing the inherent potentialities in interactive response to the challenges posed by nature, habitat and history to realize a sustainable project with an internal locus of command. The Center's extradisciplinary approach avoids fragmentation within the traditional boundaries of today's social science disciplines. Research at CRSCenter is at the service of development to give back to the community knowledge and insights derived from society.

Given its international development orientation, CRSCenter made a significant contribution to the publication of the book Quest to Rescue Our Future (Amsterdam, Rescue Our Future Foundation, 2016, 555 p., see www.rescueourfuture.org), which reflects the Center's research philosophy and practice. For 12 years, CRSCenter organized the International Amazon Forest Encounter, an annual four-day retreat on a mountaintop in the Amazon rainforest that brought together more than 180 professors, researchers, critical thinkers, innovators, NGO representatives and social and environmental activists from 16 countries to reflect on ideas for responding to the existential challenges facing humanity today and discuss alternatives for a better future for humanity, with comments that have helped shape the recently published book.

2. ORGANIZATION AND EXPERTISE

CRSCenter is a registered public liability company established in Aruba in 1999 to conduct scientific research, training and consulting. The director of CRSCenter is Dr. Glenn Sankatsing, a methodology expert with four decades of experience in scientific research in several countries, who holds a doctorate in social and economic sciences. In addition to the permanent staff, the Center sets up for each research project a customized team of experts and qualified researchers to address the specific research questions of the study. The Center has access to a group of interviewers, data entry specialists and other support staff from previous research that can be used for specific research projects. The Center’s research infrastructure is continuously updated by adapting to new methodological knowledge, improving access to data sources, updating documentation, and expanding the pool of associated researchers. The institutional strengthening of CRSCenter also focuses on the accumulation of methodological advances, research results and experiences to improve the validity and reliability of research methods and conceptual models in the social context of the research location.

3. RESEARCH PHILOSOPHY AND CONTOURS OF RESEARCH

An extradisciplinary approach, based on context and social reality, not fragmented along the traditional boundaries of current social science disciplines, provides the methodological basis for studies, analyses and measures to promote development at national, regional and global level. The mobilization of one’s own potentialities, the promotion of self-realization and the resulting internal social dynamism inform the research priorities of the Center and the search for valid theoretical approaches and suitable methodological techniques. While critically borrowing from the research methodology and theoretical knowledge available, we transcend fragmentation by academic claims on certain segments of social life and society, which current social science disciplines appropriate as their exclusive competence. The extradisciplinary approach rejects the dominant inverted logic that the anatomy of the academy determines the anatomy of society, which means that societies are seen as divided in the same way as universities are in faculties.

We must use the achievements and devices of other places that can be successfully seasoned for their proper use, for the benefit of a process of self-realization, but paternalistic contextless imitation, self-denial and the transfer of achievements, models and standards from outside can never be the engine of development. Internal social dynamism, based on context, is the engine of progress.

No society can be managed properly with a lack of knowledge about its own reality, its past, its genesis and its present. Critical decisions about our development, our social and political stability and our future status require solid data. However, it is a persistent misunderstanding that scientific research is aimed at objective knowledge. The aim of research is not to discover the truth, but to reduce the degree of speculation by proposing the most plausible explanation, while constantly seeking better ways to meet challenges and offer solutions. Unfortunately, the level of speculation in policy-making remains unacceptably high, which is why CRSCenter focuses on policy-relevant research.

No therapy is possible without diagnosis, no diagnosis without analysis, no analysis without knowledge and no useful knowledge without scientific research of social reality. That is why diagnosis, therapy and prevention are important in addressing immediate social ills. From a development perspective, however, it is not social ills, but above all social health in a balanced society that must be at the center of attention. The primary goal of research is therefore to understand the underlying factors that cause social ills and manifest themselves in acute problems. This places problem solving, policy formulation and development at the heart of the research exercise. CRSCenter aims to improve life opportunities and prospects by broadening the knowledge base for actions that promote social, economic and political stability and well-being in healthy societies, which is a mandatory requirement for a sustainable future.

The Center's code of ethics consists of freedom of research, thought and action, based on pluralistic tolerance and a critical position, characterized by a determination to accept the results of systematic thinking, examination and analysis in an unadulterated way, regardless of whether in accordance with one's own desires or the interests of the group.

4. WHAT DOES CRSCENTER OFFER?

In a spirit of development, Caribbean Reality Studies Center offers scientific research, analysis of existing data, research training and a platform for discussion and dialogue. CRSCenter is open to contract research and consulting at the national, regional and international levels that is consistent with its research philosophy and objectives, in addition to research on its own behalf.

1. Scientific research with implementable results

CRSCenter carries out scientific research projects under contract for governmental, non-governmental, private, regional and international institutions on social, cultural, economic, environmental, political and communication issues. Based on comparative, cross-cultural, extradisciplinary and development-based research, CRSCenter conducts research for transformative action to help overcome the challenges that humanity and its societies are facing today. Instead of technical reports that culminate in recommendations, CRSCenter strives to provide implementable results that already translate into actions and measures that need to be taken by involving key actors on the ground.

2. Analysis of existing data

CRSCenter offers services to organize, digitize and analyze existing data for organizations and institutions and improve their data recording to make their data suitable for statistical analysis to support policy and decision-making.

3. Consulting and training

CRSCenter provides advice on the research, statistical and methodological needs of organizations. It also helps organizations formulate their research proposals. CRSCenter offers training in research methodology and a basic and advanced course in data processing and analysis with SPSS for individual researchers, organizations and research institutions.

4. Platform for discussion and dialogue

Given its general concern for the future of humanity, CRSCenter provides a platform for reflection, discussion and dialogue on life perspectives and opportunities at local, national, regional and global levels. To bring together a critical mass of scholars and thinkers concerned with development and to form a young critical generation, CRSCenter regularly organizes scientific meetings and exchanges on the most urgent and critical issues on the agendas of countries, regions and the planet, in the form of seminars, workshops, courses and expert meetings.

To arrange an orientation meeting to discuss your research, data organization and data analysis needs or to use our training facilities, please contact CRSCenter by phone (297-5863852, 5936369) or e-mail (crscenter@crscenter.com).
